

The Institute for Learning and Teaching Tutoring Task Force

5. What services are not provided at CSU or elsewhere that should be provided to our students?

- Possibly providing YouTube videos on certain concepts where students consistently struggle. (CG)
- College-level classes are and should be difficult. We are doing a disservice to everyone by not expecting a lot from our students. The fact is that many students have terrible study habits and by the time they figure this out it may be too late. In light of these things, I think that the whole idea of “tutoring” needs to be rethought and maybe even marketed better to students. Tutoring is really teaching. It should include teaching struggling students efficient study habits because after all, our top students have developed ways of studying that are successful. Students that tutor should receive a teaching credit on their transcript. Students that need extra “teaching” should not have to look hard to find it or feel ashamed that they need it. (KS)
- I'd like to see the SI sessions that TILT is supporting for my class be offered more widely. It's quite popular with my students. (BJ)
- The only other hole that I see right now is the provision of private tutoring for hire. (BJ)
- System to match students with private tutors (HL)
- Consistent, current information on each tutoring program on campus (HL)
- Help for ESL students (HL)
- Resources for tutors to access: online (HL)
